Identity and access management with RSA Data Loss Prevention (DLP)

Protecting sensitive information is becoming increasingly complex. All types of sensitive data are being moved, transformed, and shared across organizations every day. Breaches cost companies billions of dollars on data recovery, credit monitoring, and customer relations. To add to those costs, there are significant intangible costs such as brand image and customer satisfaction. Protecting sensitive information is mission critical and in many cases, required by regulations and compliance requirements.

The RSA® Data Loss Prevention (DLP) Suite addresses these concerns by:

- Discovering and protecting sensitive data to simplify compliance and safeguard corporate secrets
- Mitigating risk with over 150 "out-of-the-box" identity aware policies
- Streamlining business processes by offering numerous automatic and manual remediation options
- Integrating with the RSA enVision® platform (SIEM) to rationalize the incident response process

Courion's Identity and Access Management (IAM) solution complements RSA's Identity Aware policy features by:

- Providing detailed information about who has access to your confidential information
- Understanding how that access was granted
- Attesting to whether that access is appropriate
- Assessing risk associated with that access
- Remediating access in order to reduce risk

By integrating DLP and IAM solutions, risk and audit groups can monitor and control access to sensitive data and enforce policies around that data.

This solution enables managers to seamlessly enforce information security policy and reduce risk with identity-rich information, while increasing overall business efficiency. The combined solution provides detailed information on access rights, as well as overall control in a workflow-based system. Users can now see who has access to what file, who granted the access, and what else they have access to.

This integration reduces workload on the IT staff, bringing a new level of agility to the business while ensuring the highest levels of security and compliance.
